BACKGROUND

The Institute of Malaysian and International Studies (IKMAS) was established on 1 April 1995 as a centre for research in Social Sciences at Universiti Kebangsaan Malaysia (UKM). On 15 August 2013, the Institute was merged with the Institute of Occidental Studies (IKON) and the Institute of West Asian Studies (IKRAB). Following the restructuring, the IKMAS now focuses on Malaysian and International Studies.

VISION, MISSION AND EDUCATIONAL GOALS

VISION

To be a research centre of excellence on regional and transregional studies leading to an understanding of historical and contemporary transformations, bearing in mind the interests of the Malaysian society.

MISSION

To engage in collaborative research, education and service that seek to establish IKMAS as a nationally and globally recognised institute for inter-disciplinary research.

EDUCATIONAL GOALS

- To conduct basic, applied and strategic research including policy input that is beneficial to society;
- To promote collaborative research and dialogue at the national and global level;
- To contribute to the discourse on globalisation, occidentalism and social transformation from the perspectives of developing nations;
- To build human capital and nurture independent scholarship through postgraduate studies.

COURSE OFFERED

OOHH6014/OOHH8014 Research Methodology (Social Sciences)

Synopsis

This course will introduce students to the different perspectives regarding the process of research, methodology of gathering data and effective use of data in research projects. The focus is to equip the students with an overall understanding of social science research principles in their effort to prepare a sound research proposal. Students will be exposed to the nature of academic thinking and writing and the requirements of academic writings. Besides, students will be introduced to various research methods such as intensive interview, survey and fieldwork, as well as various analytical tools used in qualitative and quantitative analyses. This course will also cover how artificial intelligence (AI) can be used to complement students' research.

Learning Outcomes

- Apply the basic principles, concepts and ethics of social science research.
- Identify structure of argumentation in academic texts and to assess the basis of argument used.
- Assess differences in approaches between the qualitative and quantitative research methodologies.
- Formulate appropriate data collection methods according to the defined research questions and or objectives.

Pre-requisite for Thesis Examination

Students are required to provide formal proof (e.g., an acceptance letter) from a journal or book editor confirming that their manuscript has been accepted for publication. This proof must be submitted prior to, or alongside, the final thesis.

RESEARCH ETHICS APPROVAL

Academic research involving human participants, or data and records related to humans, is encouraged to undergo review by the UKM Research Ethics Secretariat (RES) to ensure good ethical practice, although such review is not compulsory. This process aims to protect research participants, especially vulnerable individuals, and to uphold research integrity.

The RES review process aims to:

- safeguard research participants and minimize potential harm, especially for vulnerable individuals,
- meet all the institutional/legal/funding/publications requirements,
- Foster public trust in research conducted by UKM's researchers.

IKMAS postgraduate students are responsible for determining whether their research requires RES approval, in consultation with their supervisor. For students that are on a strict study timeframe, this assessment should be made within the first 6 months of enrolment. Seeking ethical approval from the RES is strongly encouraged, but not compulsory. The student and the respective supervisor are solely responsible for any implications arising from research without appropriate ethical approval, including potential issues with publication.

The application process:

1. Students and supervisors must jointly develop the research design and prepare the necessary documentation for the research ethics application.
2. A standard application package will include;
 - A research proposal
 - An example of information sheet
 - An example consent form
 - Survey or interview questions designed for the research
 - Relevant forms that can be found in the UKM's RES and IKMAS Research Ethics website.

The application package must be adjusted in accordance to students' research design.

3. Application needs to be submitted to IKMAS Research Ethics Coordinator for screening.
4. Application will only be forwarded to RES by the office of IKMAS Director (or Deputy Director) when the submitted application package fulfilled the required standards set by the RES.

The research ethics coordinator for IKMAS is Dr Nor Izzatina Abdul Aziz. For matters relating to research ethics, please use etika_ikmas@ukm.edu.my.

Note: Students are strongly advised to attend a workshop on research ethics application process conducted by IKMAS for further information.
